

Either we understand the link between our health and that of the environment or we get sick (Aula DV)

Covid-19 gave us a slap in the face of reality by showing us the devastating effects of messing with the environment. A summer of furious heat is giving it to us again, and for similar reasons. Either we learn or we get sick.

Description

A bad environment not only contravenes the recently declared new universal human right, the right to a healthy and clean environment. A bad environment affects our health and causes millions of premature deaths that cannot be counteracted by medical advances. Either we change our relationship with nature or we will get sicker and sicker.

Teachers

Fernando Javier Valladares Ros

Profesor de investigación del CSIC y profesor asociado de la Universidad Rey Juan Carlos

Fernando Valladares is a research professor at the CSIC and associate professor at the Rey Juan Carlos University. Fernando Valladares holds a PhD in biology, is a researcher at the Spanish National Research Council and associate professor at the Rey Juan Carlos University in Madrid. He is a highly cited scientist, with numerous research projects on the role of biodiversity and the impacts of climate change and human activity on ecosystems. In 2021 he received the Rey Jaume I Award, in the category of Environmental Protection, and the BBVA Foundation Environmental Communication Award. His concern for the environmental crisis has led him to actively disseminate information about the environmental crisis in various media and on his La Salud de la Humanidad channel on social networks. Both the details of his curriculum and all his informative production in multiple audiovisual formats and in press, radio and television can be found on his website: www.valladares.info
