Description

We are living in a concerning time characterized by a growing authoritarian wave that challenges liberal democracies worldwide. Discussions about a crisis of democracy have emerged, reflected in different aspects within Western countries: widespread distrust of democratic institutions, political dissatisfaction, civic disengagement, rise of totalitarian and individualistic attitudes, and inability of public institutions to address social challenges with their current structures and tools.

At a time when democracy is increasingly under threat, there is also a strong commitment to reaffirm it and delve into democratic culture. On the one hand, there is a clear and notable commitment in our country's institutions to strengthening democracy (an uncommon effort nowadays, by the way). Various strategies have been launched to promote political innovation and new forms of governance within government structures, political parties, and public institutions, with the support of different social actors. The Basque context, with its strong tradition, institutional leadership, ongoing research efforts, and initiatives led by various social actors and democratic innovation groups, including institutions like Arantzazulab, has drawn international attention. At the same time, many individuals, organisations, and progressive governments worldwide are working to study democracy in more detail and develop innovative responses to its challenges.

This UPV/EHU Summer Course aims to bring together these perspectives, highlighting the contributions that our own value system can make to global debates on democratic innovation. To this end, internationally renowned experts will take part and will provide a comparative perspective on the contributions seeking to do in this field.

Ultimately, this course aims to identify key insights for qualitative advances in democratic renewal and governance transformation.

Objectives

Explore the strategies and initiatives of local institutions and key actors in fostering democratic culture and community building.

Delve more deeply our contribution to global debates on democracy innovation from our value system and engage in dialogue with local and international experts.

Gain insights from international experts on strengthening democratic practices.

Highlight the importance of deepening democratic culture in Basque society, bringing it into public debate, and encouraging institutional engagement in these dialogues.
